In Brief

Sydney Tower venues by Loop Creative

◀ Set over three levels and perched more than 80 storeys above the CBD, the multi-million dollar refurbishment of Sydney Tower's dining offering comprises Infinity fine dining, SkyFeast buffet and Bar 83 cocktail lounge (pictured) on turret levels one, two and three respectively. Creating a distinct identity for each space, Loop Creative has transformed the tower's dated eighties revolving restaurant, bar and lacklustre event space into Sydney's most elevated drinking and dining destinations. Loop Creative's intention was to define the personalities of each venue and nest them within a cohesive whole that would appeal equally to the city's residents and visitors.

Piccolo House by Wood Marsh

▽ Designed by Wood Marsh Architecture, Piccolo House is a new multi-use building (encompassing retail, hospitality, commercial and luxury multiresidential) and headquarters developed by Piccolo. Akin to a block of stone into which the structure has been carved, the mass references the lintel as a symbol of strength providing the structural framework for the building. On the upper level, the Piccolo office penthouse reinforces the solidity of the building using silver travertine to make an appropriately elevated interior response to the overarching idea of stone being carved away. The resulting dark palette is counteracted by the use of mirrored glass that reflects the city skyline, reintroducing light throughout and reinterpreting the autumnal tones of the brickwork in the neighbouring laneway. The office includes an open-plan workspace, a kitchen and a series of meeting and support rooms, each with the same level of finish and detailing. From each space, there are sightlines to the city and surrounding landscaped terrace.
